Shall We Freeze to Death?

suns, there must be many in the depths of space. Some of them are known to us, as the dark companion of Sirius is, because they shine with a feeble and probably a reflected light, while others are wholly unknown to us because they are so dead, or because they are so remote from other suns, that they emit absolutely no light whatever proper to themselves or caught from living suns. All they do, and all they will do till the time comes for them to blaze up so that we shall know of their existence, is to lie perdus in the mysterious depths and suck in heat from the surrounding space. So far as we know, there is up reason-to believe that at any time our own solar system may not come within the influence of one of these bodies and palpably feel its tremeudous power. We may be now, and possibly there is good reason to believe that we actually are, within the sphere of such a celestial body's attraction. We know with accuracy the course of the planets, but we do not know whither the solar system is drifting. There was a time when it was believed that the sun, clustered around by planets, was on an exploring expedition around Alcyone, but observations with the spectroscope have shown the theory of Herschel to be unicanble. The stars do not whirl about one cen-tre; they go in all directions, bither and thither, some approaching our system, some receding from it, and some going directly athwart the field of view. Whither we ourselves are hastening is a question as unset-tled to-day as it was when the pyramids were built. We may be rushing toward a sun, the intense heat of which will in time dissipate the system, or we made be speeding on our way to regions where the cold of the arctic zone will be as heat. Certainly something is the matter with the earth, vicissitudes of cold and heat for which the known effects of the sun will not account have been tudes of cold and heat for which the known effects of the sun will not account have been specially rife of late years. On each recurring day the earth stands in precisely the same relation to the sun that it stood in on the corresponding day of the preceding year. To what cause was the March blizzard due, and to what is towing that there were July angustorms in Europe that there were July angustorms in Europe. that there were July snewstorms in Europe this year, where none like them were ever say that it is not at all improbable, that we are getting into the neighborhood of one of those bodies, greedy of heat, which are spoken of in the Loschmidt theory, and which are actually known to exist—though where, no one knows. We come violently into contact with the cold of space whenever there is such a season as that of last March, and that space may be growing still March, and that space may be growing still the cold of space whenever there is such a season as that of last of last March, and that space may be growing still the cold of space whenever there is such a season as that of last of l known before? It is possible, and we should the region of space into which we are going, day after day. The "dead suns" may be sucking away the life blood of the solar system. Who can tell? Not the Dies Irw of fire may be our doom, but the day of lifelessness through the rigor of a winter com-pared with which the climate of the polar

A Town in Danger .- Dr. Ernest Weissenbauer, Professor of Geology in Heidelberg University, is at Cincinnati for a rest after a visit of scientific inspection to the natural gas wells of Findlay, Ohio. Prof. Weissenbauer says he found the vastness of the gas-well country greatly underestimated, and that underneath the town of Find-lay at great depths lay a mighty cavern filled with highly inflammable gas under tremendous pressure. He connected some by cracking sounds. A delicate heat instrument was then connected, and after careful calculations based on its results, he found that at a distance of only one mile beneath the great gas cavity, which lies unand again he observed, and always with the same results. Not satisfied with making the observation at one point he took several within a radius of three miles. confirmed. He says that about 1,200 feet blow the city of Findlay lies an immense cavern beside which even Mammoth Cave shrinks into insignificance. It is many miles long and in some places more than half a mile deep. This is crowded full of gas which is under a pressure almost inconceivable. Below this cavern are several strata of rock, perhaps a mile thick, and then this great internal fire at a temperature of over 3,000°. He says he discovered something of the nature of the strata that lies between the gas cavity and the fire. It is at first a solid rock. Beneath this lies a great mass of soft and crumbling stone, badly formed, full of fissures. Then another layer of considerable thickness equal to the first layer in hardness and solidity. The last of these layers, which lies directly over the first, is melting away. About ten miles from Find-lay on either side it is of great thickness, but as the town is neared it becomes thinner. The furnace beneath is disintegrating it and ever lessening the barrier between itself and the gas wells. From the tremendous crack-ling which is to be heard by means of the sound instrument it is almost certain that
